

WOR4-5p.

1/28/67

Dear Miss Amrhein,

Thanks for your constructive letter of the 25th.

I suppose the problem is that I was shocked at finding a man for whom I'd had such respect from his writing to be a man who lies without concern or shame and that I cannot abide lying about this subject.

Further, before I got there he and WOR corrupted the entire program behind my back, unbalancing it and so loading it with lies that had I been given all the rest of the time there would not have been adequate provision for refuting them.

They were unfair in even such petty ways I suppose I was more angry than I should have been. They promised several times to give my address but didn't (I am the publisher of the second book which is not in most bookstores). Thus people who may have wanted to write me could not. They subsequently promise to give my address on the rerun and I'm told they did not. I am also informed that the switchboard told callers they didn't know my address.

Again, thanks.

Sincerely,

Harold Weisberg
